*Calculated against MSCI All Country World ex-USA Growth NR Index

Beta is a means of measuring the volatility of a security in comparison with the market as a whole. A beta of 1 indicates that the security's price has moved with the market. A beta of more or less than 1 indicates that the security's price will be more or less volatile, respectively, than the market.

Standard Deviation measures the performance volatility of an investment against itself — that is, how much the investment goes up or down. The larger the standard deviation, the more likely the investment may experience a return that is far more or far less than its average.
